Hudson's Bay Co. Roach Belly Knife

This Hudson's Bay Company trade knife is 10" overall length. The blade is 5-1/2" long, and is 1-1/4" at the widest point. The 1095 hi carbon steel blade is 3/32" thick, etched much like a damascus steel blade, except the steel forms a random pattern. The 4-1/2" long handle is made of nicely finished maple scales, secured with six brass cutler's pins. Each knife will vary slightly. This style of knife was a popular trade item of the Hudson's Bay Company.

Mounting Arkansas Whet Stones:

Misnamed “soft” or “hard”, sometimes called “white” or “black”, the natural abrasive grain structure or “grit” of the stone determines the cutting speed, not the color. “Soft” Arkansas stones are medium fine grit. “Hard” stones are very fine grit, very slow cutting. Mounted to cedar blocks, with illustrated instructions, Novaculite is a compact quartzose rock of almost pure silica. Cut with diamond saws, in the Ouachita Mountains of Arkansas, this stone may be 340 million years old.
