

English Fowling Gun

Build this traditional flint smoothbore gun or a Gentleman's sporting rifle.

A fine English flint fowling gun created from our parts by Michael Hayes

Our 20 gauge 42" barrel is our most popular octagon-to-round barrel for our English fowler. We also stock 30" and 36" length 20 gauge barrels, or we can trim the 42" barrel to other lengths, on special order. Precision profiled, our barrels fit our pre-inlet stock.

Made exclusively for Track, by Colerain, we also offer 24 and 28 gauge, or .54, or .58 rifled barrels in this profile. All have a 1" octagon breech, threaded 3/4-16 for your plug, with a nominal .550" thread depth. This thread depth is now used by Rice, Getz, and others, to simplify vent placement, without compromising strength.

The tapered octagon breech is over 12" length, with the front 4" fading to 16 sides. A double wedding band at the transition to round is followed by a single wedding band 3" forward. The muzzle is .815" diameter. Smoothbore 20, 24 or 28 gauge barrels are cylinder bored. We recommend lead or bismuth shot, or patched balls in these highly polished bores. Do not load steel shot in our fine barrels!

Our .54 or .58 caliber barrels are cut rifled .012" to .016" deep, depending on caliber, with six "round bottom" grooves, for ball.

Fitting a rifled barrel to our English Fowling Gun stock? You may desire a rear sight. We suggest our 1770 Isaac Haines rear sight, ideal for a 1" octagon barrel, with concave bevells on three edges, and a flat top. File a square sight notch for use with a blade front sight, using our Swiss pattern needle files. The dovetail is about .585" long, with .535" base about .062" deep. Install it in a shallow "raised dovetail", formed using our dovetail forming chisel.

Truly a deluxe specimen, this gun is on display in our retail store. Stocked in traditional walnut, gun maker Michael Hayes included a number of options. The barrel is retained by three tiny iron keys.

The hooked breech was reshaped from a long tang plug. The barrel is easily dismounted. Made entirely from our parts, Mr. Hayes selected a few alternate choices from our catalog, to create this fine flint fowling gun.
