Edward Marshall’s longrifle from Christian’s Spring, Pennsylvania

A fine early Christian’s Spring longrifle by contemporary gun maker Kendall Brady

Edward Marshall’s rifle stock, pre-inlet ....................... #Stk-EM-M1

Precision pre-inlet for our Jaeger flint lock, BP-Early-1 buttplate, 37” swamped Colerain barrel and tang. Select one of our early triggerguards, set triggers, and 3/8” rod pipes, which are not inlet. The forend is square ahead of the lock panels. Called a transitional longrifle because it combines both early Jaeger and later longrifle features, it has a “bulbous forend” which bulges at the entry pipe. This stock is more correctly called an Albrecht (Albright) style, in honor of the early gunmakers of Christians’ Spring, Pennsylvania.

Edward Marshall’s rifle stock, pre-inlet ........................................ $255.00

Edward Marshall’s rifle stock is made of plain or curly maple, or black walnut. Pre-inlet for our Jaeger lock, early buttplate, Colerain’s 37” swamped barrel, and drilled for a 3/8” ramrod, the stock has 14” pull, with 3-1/4” drop from sights. The buttplate is about 4-3/4 x 2-1/8”.

Early longrifles, made at Christians’ Spring, Pennsylvania are transitional rifles, blending formal German style with innovative American features. Each piece of this parts set is offered separately. Order one part, or the entire kit as listed.
