Tennessee sideplates.....#SP-TN-1, 2 or 3

Tennessee rifles date from the late flint period. Often trimmed in iron, sometimes in brass, these rifles usually feature fine imported locks, double set triggers and figured curly maple stocks. Many have primitive hand forged furniture and long tangs.

These single screw sideplates are inlet flush to the lock panel surface.

Joseph Long sideplate.....#SP-JL-1-B

This lozenge shaped sideplate design was used by the famous Joseph Long of Snyder County, Pennsylvania. His late flint and early percussion period longrifles were generally decorated with geometric inlays, neatly set flush with the surface, as was this sideplate.

Joseph Long and his contemporary rifle makers are depicted in The Kentucky Rifle and Me, by Edith Cooper. Photographs in this volume show that several makers used similar single screw sideplates, on both rifles and pistols. About .090" thick.
